Discussion of 2026 slate

Alex Adkins gave a legislative update highlighting the unusual conclusion of the 2026 Oklahoma legislative session, which adjourned two weeks early following passage of the state budget. Members discussed the upcoming primary elections, several key statewide races, and increasingly contentious political environment. Ms. Adkins reviewed legislation enacted during the session, including measures affecting open meetings, county planning commissions, public infrastructure districts, fireworks regulations, and firearms policies.

Members discussed property tax proposals and their potential impact on local governments, schools, libraries, health departments, and other public entities that rely on property tax revenue. Concerns were raised about long-term funding implications if property tax limitations or reductions are approved by voters.

Looking ahead, the members agreed to reconvene in August to begin developing legislative priorities for the 2027 session. Members also discussed increasing outreach to legislative candidates, as well as newly elected officials. They also discussed emergency management, data centers and other emerging policy issues.
